When I click a button, I want to clear that panel. I want to use the SetFocusGained() method to accomplish this, but when I click the button, and the panel loses focus (because I leave the frame), it calls the SetFocusGained() method again. Is there any way to clear the panel's focus, so that when the panel leaves focus, it can't be re-selected? A:

Keyboard Shortcuts Question by :Jagadish Reddy We are developing a web based application which is password protected. The access to the web application is done by setting a password which is entered into an input box and submitted. Following is the requirement, the page should be valid only if the entered password is correct. We are using Zest and we have access to both the web application and a Zest server. 1. User submits the password via input box and submits it. 2. It should redirect to another page and show whether the password is valid or not. If valid it should do some processing. 3. If the password is invalid it should redirect to the input box again. Any help will be appreciated. Question by :ABCD I would like to create a form using Zest or any other tool that can be used to create a form and get data from a user through the form. I would like to have a setup where I can have an admin and then be able to give permissions for various people to get the data to populate into the system. I would like to assure you that my opinions are my own and not necessarily those of El Dorado School District nor El Dorado Township. I know our district is a good district and I know it's moving in the right direction. I do however, feel the need to express my concern on the events that took place this week as it relates to the Trenton City Council meeting. As for the "guess work" you have done on these emails, it only proves that you don't know what you are doing or what you don't know. You have taken my side of the argument, but only that side of the argument and nothing more. The email that I sent to your office is a highly contested and emotional document that I cannot let go of. If you wanted to take a stance on the issue, you should have engaged me and researched the issue rather than using vague questions to send me a message that you have formed an opinion based upon a "gu
