If you've already familiar with Photoshop, you can skip this and just go straight to the rest of the article. I have tried making the entire cell bold, as well as the text in each cell. The closest I have gotten is making the entire table bold. My site is Right now, you can click on the images and move them around the table. A: You would be able to change it if the sortable plugin was using the css class on the parent to style it, but since it is using span to tag the content, then you would need to make changes directly to the span tag. You should be able to change the tag and style it any way you like. For your example, here is what the span's would need to look like: Food, Beverages & Accommodations You would need to change the class name to moveable_table_entry instead of table_entry and change the spans style to include text-transform: bold; You can also probably change the spans to use the inline style and remove the class attribute, but I have not done that and I have not researched it so I can't offer much help on that front. Q: Vue.js: Push a component into an existing component I'm having trouble figuring out how to push a component (in this case a Table) into another component. I have something like this:
