Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a light emitting diode (LED) device and, more particularly, to an LED device having different light distribution patterns. 2. Description of Related Art Light emitting diode devices can be categorized as point light sources and linear light sources based on a range of light dispersion of light emission emitted from the device. With respect to a traditional point light source, a light source of the point light source has a spotlight-type distribution, and may be used for a light source of various communication or information devices, such as a notebook computer, a mobile phone, a personal digital assistant or an electronic dictionary, a light source of a keyboard or a mouse. The traditional point light source may be used as a backlight source of a display device such as a liquid crystal display (LCD) device.

Although the traditional point light source may generate a more concentrated light beam, the light intensity generated by a traditional point light source is relatively low, and thus a light transmittance of a transmission panel may be low. Moreover, a light produced by a traditional point light source is diffused into the transmission panel via a light guide plate, such that the light is transmitted to the display device in an unadjustable manner. Therefore, the light emission intensity of the light produced by the traditional point light source cannot be adjusted in real time. When light emission intensity of the light produced by the point light source is increased, the light produced by the point light source may have a greater influence on the user's eyes and health, and thus a usage of the light produced by the point light source may be
