Introducing the interface The interface of Photoshop Elements is very similar to that of Photoshop CS4. In this book, I introduce and use Elements the way I would Photoshop. However, if you're just looking for the bare-bones basics of using Elements, you can learn this information on the Help screen. In this section, I show you how to use the most important features, tools, and menus. I encourage you to try out Elements and play around with all its features — but not right now. What makes Photoshop Elements better than regular Photoshop? In addition to basic editing functions, Photoshop Elements allows you to use other tools that Photoshop does not have. It comes with a range of tools for photographers such as controlling exposure, changing white balance and correcting chroma-key. It also has tools that you would need to download and install on your computer for advanced photo editing. Here are some examples of how the tools in Photoshop Elements are better than those in Photoshop: Basic tools You can do basic edits on images you have saved in Photoshop Elements with the tools that are present on the home screen. These tools include Cut, Copy, Paste, Rotate, Crop, and Repeat. Exposure, Brightness, Contrast, Saturation and Sharpness are the features included with the Edit tab. An interesting thing about the Exposure tool is that, unlike Photoshop, it allows you to tilt the camera at an angle. This will help you choose the right settings for different parts of the image. You can add a vignette effect, a 3-D effect, and you can also add a vintage filter, which will let you alter the color in the image. What are the advantages of Photoshop Elements? You can use Photoshop Elements with a range of different files including RAW files. You can adjust the settings and features on the click of a button. You have more options when it comes to applying different effects. This means you can do more with your photos to make them look more appealing. For example, you can remove objects from a photo, cut out part of the photo, add a background or tweak the color. You can change the quality of your photos. You can set your photo to either low or high quality. Photoshop Elements allows you to edit 8 million colors compared to the 4.8 million colors in the normal version. You can also do more with the contrast and level of contrast. This includes adding color to black and white images, converting greyscale images to color, changing the contrast, brightness, shadows, shadows, levels, saturation, exposure and more. Photoshop Elements has additional layers for layers including Layer Groups for more control over the layers. The property editor allows you to tweak the individual layers. You can crop and resize the image in any desired size from a very small thumbnail to a page-sized image. You can alter the resolution of an image and add an automated resolution drop. Image caption The army is having to restructure a number of infantry battalions The military's long-serving Challenger 2 main battle tank has been withdrawn from frontline units in Northern Ireland, it has emerged. It follows the planned withdrawal of the army's three main infantry battalions, the BBC understands. Army sources said it was a matter of cost-saving at least until the next year. The Queen's Regiment, which serves in the province, said there was no requirement for the tank. BBC News NI understands that 1 Brigade, based in Belfast, will have to find another use for the tank before the end of the year. It will not be sent back to the depot in Londonderry, the Royal Regiment of Fusiliers. Image caption The infantry battalions have been removed from active service While the army's armoured infantry battalions, based around Armagh, have been removed from active service, there are still some Challenger 2 tanks in the reserve of the Royal Artillery in Belfast. Two artillery batteries from the Royal Regiment of Scotland and one from the Black Watch will be deployed on foot, serving with the army's 33 Engineer Regiment. The battalions will now be headquartered in Letterkenny and Enniskillen. The army is having to restructure a number of infantry battalions, with one being taken out of Scotland. It has been removed from the north coast of the province and is now based in the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. The army has also kept a Royal Logistic Corps unit - based in Belfast - in reserve because it is needed to support the reconfigured infantry battalions in Northern Ireland. A number of soldiers will move back to the depot in Londonderry, which will be stripped of equipment. The army is also having to restructure its logistics logisitcs as well as its cavalry and engineering units. Cpl Harry King, a member of the Royal Horse Artillery, which is based in Enniskillen, said there was no problem with the tank. "We don't have an infantry battalion, so we don't have an infantry company that would use the tank, so it's been removed," he said. "It does need to go back, but it's not something that is hindering us." Army reservists will be given the chance to train on the tank,
