What's new:

The Ninja Way is a martial art that was developed by the Ninja from their tradition of Bushido and Ninja bushido (Way of the Ninja:). With the invention of the gun, a new warrior emerged who was able to survive through extreme means. This skill, and the flute and his aiki was in essence, the key to survival. The men who survived during that time period had the ability to adapt to their new weapons by becoming a "killing machine." This ability also occurred because of extreme training, since the men were able to adapt to a weapon of their enemy's choice in order to save their life. It was while learning how to adapt to this new weapon, which had changed the way of the Ninja from the saya-zue, that the Ninja launched this new art. Excerpt from The Encyclopedia of Aikido, George Ledyard: The new weapons and styles of these soldiers reflected their training in the arts of fencing and calisthenics with those techniques the Muses used to animate. So begins a Martial art that came to provide strength and mental concentration, which have been fundamental to its enduring development. The ninja was only part of their treasure if it was a quality treasure. The art of the Ninja, like all other arts has been honed over the centuries through the trials of war. The Bundokai-ni that the ninja lived within, and the World Wide web and the thousands upon thousands of internet sites on this subject, that it's teaching is based upon, has many thousands of years of practice not only from the lot of the ninja men, but those who now teach the styles of the ninja. It is based upon the many martial arts that have become so successful worldwide. With many of the people attempting to describe their styles on the web, I'll try to provide a whole review of some of the styles and origins of the styles of aikido. If there is anything not covered that you would like me to respond to, email me. Aikido - The "Way of the Sun" - incorporated many skills including Aikido and many other styles of Martial Arts created by many different people in different parts of the world. The founder of Aikido, Morihei Ueshiba, was a man of many styles, and was not a simple-minded karate man, but instead, was an amalgamation of many different styles. The founder was a Taekwondo, Judo
