I have a spark dataframe containing more than 50 million records. I want to push the data into elasticsearch using spark. I can export the data from pyspark to json file and then push it to elasticsearch. But, it takes a long time to load the data. So, I was looking for some other method. Can anyone suggest how can I do this in better way? A: I found a solution. I want to share it with you guys. 1. Load all data from elasticsearch into a json file. 2. Send the data to the application which will push the data in elasticsearch through a function. 3. I used elasticsearch-hadoop library for this. It takes 2hrs to load the data(50 million records). Before packing the data in the function, I used to remove the duplicate. It takes extra 2 minutes. However, it is very effective. pip install elasticsearch-hadoop pip install elasticsearch_dsl import elasticsearch_dsl as es def process_data(data): #cleaning up data data = data.drop_

I have built this software application, I believe to be useful. It is capable of building custom dictionaries (from.txt files), where words can be added to the dictionary, once they are learned. The dictionary you build is created in a database, and can then be shown to the user. There is an option to create a custom test, to be able to test the user's newly learned words. All the test results are logged and can be plotted in a graph to keep track of your progress.Q: AVCaptureSessionVideoDeviceEffectBasicLightBoost control: "An invalid number of values passed to the 'effectLevel' parameter" When trying to set AVCaptureSessionVideoDeviceEffectBasicLightBoost to enabled for my session, I'm getting AVCaptureSessionVideoDeviceEffectBasicLightBoostControl: Runtime Exception: An invalid number of values passed to the 'effectLevel' parameter, the range is 0 to 1.
