No. 2D03-1650. District Court of Appeal of Florida, Second District. August 26, 2004. Frank Pierce, pro se. No appearance required for appellee. WHATLEY, Judge. The appellant, Frank Pierce, appeals the order of the Unemployment Appeals Commission denying his request for benefits. The Board of Review denied benefits based upon an adverse impact statement issued by the Department of Community Affairs which indicated that Pierce was overpaid benefits. In this appeal, Pierce contends that the overpayment should be offset by the wage loss payment benefits he has received from his employer.[1] We disagree. The Florida Unemployment Compensation Law authorizes a refund of any overpayment "due to an error or an omission of the bureau." See § 443.151, Fla. Stat. (2001). The law also permits a refund of any overpayment upon a specific application of the claimant, but requires that "such claim must be filed within the six-month period provided for filing claims." § 443.151(1). In the case at hand, Pierce's application was filed on February 13, 2002, and the overpayment was not discovered until September 9, 2002. Thus, the six-month limit for filing a claim had already expired when the overpayment was discovered. In Olds v. Florida Unemployment Appeals Commission, 627 So.2d 375 (Fla. 2d DCA 1993), this court held that a request for refund of an overpayment "must be filed within the six-month period provided for filing claims, and even then, the claimant must demonstrate that the overpayment was the result of an error or an omission of the *306 agency." Id. at 377. We concluded that the claimant had "presented no claim for a refund of benefits within the six-month period." Id. We conclude that, similarly, in the instant case, Pierce failed to file a timely claim for a refund of the overpayment. Thus, the order of the Unemployment Appeals Commission is affirmed.
