To characterize pediatric otorhinolaryngologist practices to facilitate comparative practice-based research. An Internet-based survey was distributed to all members of the American Academy of Otolaryngology-Head and Neck Surgery for further analysis. Fifty-nine (20.9%) surveys were completed. Average age of the respondents was 52.6 years. The average number of children seen per week with otologic and rhinologic complaints is 38.4 and 2.2, respectively. The average number of ENT office visits per month is 5.4 for otologic complaints, 2.2 for sinusitis, and 1.0 for rhinitis. Most respondents provide surgical services for a separate practice. Although respondents infrequently see children for otorhinolaryngologic complaints, they manage otologic and rhinologic disease as commonly as adults. Of all respondents, 79.1% reported a separate surgical practice. This study helps characterize the practice of pediatric otorhinolaryngologists by describing their practice patterns. More comparative research is needed. 3b Laryngoscope, 128:94-97, 2018.The present invention generally relates to tilt or tilt-rotor type aircraft.
