According to the study conducted by the Sexual Violence Research Centre at University of Central Lancashire in north west England, the country has among the highest rates of unwanted pregnancy and birth in the world, the Express Tribune reported. The report titled 'Daughters of Eve', released in July, found that 22.7 per cent of Pakistani Muslim women reported being victims of pregnancy and birth driven by sexual violence. It also showed that around 9.3 per cent of women in Pakistan have experienced marital rape, with Punjab recording the highest rate at 15.6 per cent. Though the prevalence of such violent acts has decreased in the last three years, the number of survivors of marital rape is quite high in Pakistan, the report said. It found that 18.4 per cent of women aged 18-24 in Pakistan were victims of marital rape, the highest rate in the world. Though the rate is a little lower among the 25-34 year-old group, it is still higher than in the UK and the USA (4.8 per cent and 1.4 per cent respectively). Punjab had the highest prevalence of marital rape (19.4 per cent), followed by Sindh (18.4 per cent), Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (17.2 per cent) and Balochistan (16.9 per cent). "This is a problem that would only be compounded by the fact that women who report marital rape often fear retribution from their husbands and are unlikely to seek help," the report said. In Punjab, unmarried women, girls and women travelling for work had the highest prevalence of this crime. In Balochistan, women in the 35-49 year-old group had the highest prevalence of marital rape (18.1 per cent), followed by the younger group (18.4 per cent). The report revealed that one in three Pakistani women had experienced some form of sexual violence in their lifetime. The figure was marginally lower for the younger women, with 25 per cent reporting sexual assault in their lifetime and 13 per cent being victims of it. However, for the 18-24 year-old group, it was a staggering 6d1f23a050
